Future Perfect Tense

[Action Verbs, Be Verbs, Possessive Forms]

Future Perfect Tense : Action Verbs

Affirmative ➞

Subject + will have + past participle of the verb + object

Example ➞

He will have traveled to five countries by next year.

Negative ➞

Subject + will not have + past participle + object

Example ➞

She will not have written the letter by then.

Interrogative ➞

Will + subject + have + past participle + object?

Example ➞

Will you have completed the assignment by 3 PM?

Note:

Use will have with all subjects to form the future perfect tense. Shall have may be used with I and we in formal English, but will have is the standard form in modern English.

Future Perfect Tense : Be Verbs

Affirmative ➞

Subject + will have + been + complement

Example ➞

He will have been a teacher for 10 years by next month.

Negative ➞

Subject + will not have (won't have) + been + complement

Example ➞

She won't have been feeling well by the end of the day.

Interrogative ➞

Will + subject + have + been + complement?

Example ➞

Will he have been present at the meeting?

Note:

It is less common in everyday English. Use will have been to show that a state, condition, identity, or relationship will have existed continuously until a specific future time.

Future Perfect Tense : Possessive Forms

Affirmative ➞

Subject + will have + had + object/experience

Example ➞

I will have had lunch by the time you arrive.

Negative ➞

Subject + will not have + had + object/experience

Example ➞

I won't have had the chance to meet her by next week.

Interrogative ➞

Will + subject + have + had + object/experience?

Example ➞

Will she have had her appointment by 2 PM?

Note:

Use will have had with all subjects to show that possession or an experience will be completed before a specific future time. Here, will have forms the future perfect tense, and had is the past participle of have.
